There are a number of trends in our society, regarding death and dying, which seem to be in conflict with accepted wisdom One is the "funeral reform society." This movement desires to eliminate the body from the funeral, and members show a great reluctance to permit their children to attend a funeral ceremony. This is complemented by the practice in medical hospitals of shielding children from the dying. We also tend to separate ourselves from the aged and dying by having them live in special communities

As most social scientists agree, these trends are in sharp contrast with our social past, as well as with our present knowledge regarding the dynamics of personal loss. Giving the pattern of modern living, including smaller and separated families. it is more important than ever before to have the support of the community, to bid a public farewell, and to maintain tradition and ritual

Arthur Ashe 10-Kilometer Race Set For Sun., Oct. 7

Excitement ran high and runners ran hard during last year's First Annual Arthur Ashe 10-kilometer race in Amityville, an event which celebrated personal health, well-being, and the triumph of human spirit over physical limitations. This fall, hundreds will repeat the arduous course, cheered on by the crowd and once again received at the finish line by Mr. Ashe, world-famed Wimbledon champion and a recovering victim of heart disease.

The Second Annual Arthur Ashe IO-K race (a joint effort by the American Heart Association, the Long Island Road-runner's Club, and the Brunswick Hospital Center of Amityville) will tout "wellness" as its theme, celebrating physical firness and the wisdom of regular exercise. October 7, is the scheduled date for the event, proceeds of which will benefit the American Heart Association.

This year's race - apart from the customary,drama and excitement of the run - will squarely locus on public aware-ness of fitness, sound nutrition, and the all-important bal-ance of physical and mental health. Arthur Ashe, not only a legend on the tennis court, but a champion over comp regend on the tennis court, but a champion over complex coronary bypass surgery, will again present the awards and discuss the merits of physical self-awareness as a guide-post to total health and well-being. Literature on nutrition and keeping fit will be provided to all in attendance, and a videotaped presentation entitled "Game Plan for Survival" will be shown to those who wish a bit of inspirational motivation. As a matter of interest, both before and after the race, runners' blood pressure rates will be taken, to illustrate the effects of physical stress on the body.

The Second Annual Arthur Ashe 10-K will not only provide a thrilling demonstration of physical stamina and per-sonal determination, but will serve to educate and illuminate as well. We believe the message of this "health-fest" competi-tion is of importance to all Long Islanders and residents of the Greater New York area,

HOW TO COPE WITH ANGER

One of the easiest things in the world to do is to get angry. Just let someone offend us, hurt our pride, step on our ego, and we start to boil. I remember a profes-sor once stating, "When you lose your cool, you usually lose." I've tested the wisdom of that statement several times and have discovered it to be painfully true. I've lost my temper on occasion and have discovered that as a result, I lost more than that.

In Ephesians 4:31 we read, "Let all bitterness, read, "Let all bitterness, wrath, and anger, and cla-mose and evil speaking be put away from you with all malice." If this is not clear enough, in James we read, "Let every map be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath." King Solomon, the wire man writes in his Prowrath." King Solomon, the wise man, writes in his Pro-verbs, "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty." Anger is one of the cvils listed in Galatians along with blasphemy, adul-tery, idolatry, murder, and drunkenness. God's word doesn't fool around in its speaking about anger, for its poison is something we must, with God's help, seek to control or it will destroy us. US

Even when our anger doesn't lock us in combat, it doesn't lock us in combat, it is not good for our health. The person was right who said, "Every time 1 get angry. I drive a nail in my coffin." Anger destroys. In anger Cain killed his brother; Moses cast down the tablets of the law; the elder son refused to go to the prodical son's coming-home party; Peter cut off the car off the priest's slave. Anger the priest's slave. Anger most often turns into a destructive force.

Some people claim that a bad temper simply runs in the family. Anger is hereditary in the sense that all of us were born as sinners, but a person can't justify their anger by saying that it runs in the family. Anger can be controlled controlled.

Anger betrays emotional and spiritual immaturity. People who constantly fly off the handle have never matured emotionally. Like a child who throws a temper tantrum to get its way, they continue the same behavior. Other methods of showing anger such as pouting, or not talking to another per-son, is as psychologically harmful as lashing out physharmful as lashing out phys-ically. Anger displayed in any form is not good. How do we not only cope with anger but overcome it? First, we must recognize that it is unacceptable in God's sight. Anger is sin. Next, we need to confest this in to the load and the bulk sin to the Lord and actively seek his help in overcoming it in ourselves. When we feel ourselves, when we reel ourselves getting uptight and anger beginning to build, let the image of Christ on the cross come to mind. At a time when anger, hatred, and venom would understandably by human standards pour from some-one's lips, Jesus had mercy and said, "Father forgive them." We welcome Christ to indwell us to reach out and forgive our offenders when we, humanly speak-ing, find it so difficult. To control our negative emo-tions we must let go and let the Lord be more in control of us. Realizing how gra-ciously God has forgiven us through Christ in the verti-cal relationship between he and us, we welcome Christ's inductive to be the bestien and us, we welcome Crists s indwelling to bring healing to the horizontal relation-ship of husband and wife, parents and children, brother and sister, neighbor to neighbor.

We need to make every irritation an opportunity for prayer, every offense an opportunity for forgiveness. It is possible for us to cope with anger, yes. Can we ever control it? Yes. With the help of God we can have victory over this sinful emotion.

By P. O. Kenneth A. Box .

By U.S. Senstor AI D'Amsto "The Great Federal Loan Giveaway"

Borrowing money from the federal government should not be construed as a free giveaway. When people take out a loan with the U.S. government, they should know without a doubt that if they shirk their responsibil-ity to repay, Uncle Sam will

EW

That only makes good economic sense, especially when we are trying to reduce the size of the federal deficit. But the fact of the matter is, the federal government has never pursued debt col-lection aggressively and come after them and collect. consequently over $16 billion in outstanding loans have slipped through federal bill collector's hands. In fact, next to nothing is being done to retrieve more than 124,000 delinquent federal loans owed the Departments of Education, Agriculture, Housing & Urban Development, and the Small Busness Administration.

This poor record promp-ted me to introduce the Fed-eral Debt Recovery Act (S. 1668), legislation which has received the support of the Reagan Administration and which recently passed the Senate overwhelmingly by a vote of 96-to-1. This bill, now under consideration in the House of Representa-tives, would allow the Justice Department to contract out to private law firms in order to collect the govern-ment's debts. Federal debt collection cases are now referred to the U.S. Attorneys offices which are already overburdened with more critical crime-fighting duties. Because these cases are low on the list of priori tics, many are not acted upon. U.S. Attorneys are crime fighters, not bill collectors. Unquestionably, federal debts should be recovered, but not by sacrificing the time and effectiveness of the time and effectiveness of the U.S. Attorneys who are needed to combat drug rings and organized crime. Pri-vate attorneys, on the other hand, can devote the necessary time and effort to pursue and collect money the government. wed Under the terms of this legislation, they will do it competitively and at no added cost to the U.S. Treasury.

If we are serious about cutting the deficit then we must prove it by making sure our government acts responsibly to collect its debts. Passage of my bill will save the American taxpayer billions and will send a clear message to all debtors of the federal government that they better pay up because a loan from Uncle Sam is not a givcaway.
