RIPPLES OF JOY THERE'S mirth in old Long Island. Suburban folks are gay. No lips are pursed by burning thirst.

A NEW York literary agent, who had the handling of the late Huey Long's book "I Am President," said the other day that he asked the Senator why he made the choices for his mythical cabinet.

ON Halloween a policeman's lot is not a happy one. It's even more unhappy the next morning when he has to find all the signs that have been lifted from the entrances to estates.

One reason for their election was that the people felt that there had been too much extravagance among Republican officials, and they believe that it was time to call a halt and see what the other party would do with their affairs.

AMITYVILLE THEA

Wallace Beery and Jack O'Connell are united once more in a new picture, "O'Shar Boy," at the Amityville Theatre beginning Sunday, November 10, and playing through Tuesday, November 12. This new picture is a background of appeal—the circus, with pathos, humor and spectacularly punctuated with animal thrills. Here is a picture Beery-Cooper fans are waiting for ever since "Champ." It is their picture opening shot to the 9 out. From the standpoints of spectacle, "O'Shar Boy" has never been equalled.

"The Gay Divorcé," at the Amityville Theatre, Wednesday, November 13, stars Francis Lederer and Loretta Young. It all starts when a sweet young secretary, who has just left her life to be in a gay life, wins a surprise and decides to spend one delicious spree of the night.

At the Amityville Theatre day and Saturday, November 10 and 11, a double feature will be presented, "Little Boy Blue," which marks the debut of the five-year-old Sybil Jason. It is a picture that contains hilarious touching pathos and a romance. There is a four headed by Sybil Jason, including Glenda Farrell, Armstrong and Edward Horton. Sybil, who is in years of age, plays the orphan who is adopted into a family living by their wit.

THESE DAYS

By JULIAN MASON

The New Deal Lites By the "rules of 'Under the Rules' politics," Mr. Roosevelt has received a severe blow through this week's elections in Pennsylvania and New York. Actual voting at the polls (not in a mere straw-ballet) shows the soundness of the general belief that the New Deal is losing, or has lost, the East. On Tuesday, the Democrats failed in their daring raid for the election of a mayor of the historically Republican city of Philadelphia, and the Republicans spiked the Roosevelt New Deal and the Lehman "Little New Deal" by regaining control of the lower chamber of the New York legislature. These contests assume national political significance under the implacable "rules of politics." That is to say that no one can explain them away and assert that they "don't mean anything." By the rules, they do. The rules say that if one side to a contest stakes its all on a single issue, and the other side accepts, then, the result must be accepted as bearing importantly on that issue. In the greatest city of Pennsylvania, Guffey and Earle, the two New Dealers who have carried everything before them, deliberately challenged the Republicans to an advance test for 1936, in the mayoralty election. They were thoroughly licked. The rules of politics accept that defeat as meaning that Mr. Farley's buoyant talk of capturing Pennsylvania for Mr. Roosevelt in the next national election must turn sharply downward.

The Really Great The case in New York City is even more decisive. It is so great a blow at the Roosevelt-Farley set-up as to stand forth as a supreme blunder by those once supposedly impeccable politicians. Republican State Chairman Melvin C. Eaton started, conducted and finished the state assembly campaign on the one plank: "This is a test of the New Deal. If the state gives a Republican control of the Assembly, it means a repudiation of Mr. Roosevelt!" Think in what splendid contrast this was to former chairman Macy's cowardice ("not mentioning national questions") Mr. Farley was dumb enough, or confident enough, to accept Mr. Eaton's challenge. He let the election be a New Deal test, he entered into the campaign on that basis, and upon it he sent out 284,000 "personal" letters. And he lost. Now, no matter how he may try to wiggle out, he is "pinned." By the inexorable rules of politics, people and writers all over the country will accept the New York vote as a rebuke to the New Deal and a repudiation of Franklin Roosevelt by his home state. People say, "Well, he still has the South and the West." All right, but just suppose that he had won on Tuesday in New York and Pennsylvania! Again, the "rules of politics" would have said, "Why, the unfortunate Republicans haven't even got the East!" No sir, it was a famous victory. As Mr. Roosevelt will find out, somewhere along the line.

A Lesson For The defeat of Mr. Mr. La Guardia Joseph McGoldrick and 14 Fusion Aldermen in Kings County, a political horse of quite another color. McGoldrick, practically uninvited, tried to force himself upon Kings as a reform district attorney. There was no general spirit of revolt behind him and he made one of those self-righteous "ought to" campaigns to which the American voter, like other human beings, so rarely rises. It is too bad he lost. It is too bad that his value as a future candidate for good government was, by defeat, so greatly lessened. The moral of McGoldrick's failure, says Mayor La Guardia is that "You can't carry the ball alone." That is a moral that the Mayor should take deeply to his own heart. He loses his aldermanic and other Fusion by-elections, one by one, because he also tries to "carry the ball" without inviting any team work whatsoever from the Republican organization.

N. Darling Had Promised Development Of Sanctuary Here

LIHOOD NOW SEEN AS REMOTE

likelihood of an early development of the Tobay Beach bird sanctuary by the United States Biological Service seemed remote this week when it was announced by J. N. "Dirk" Darling, its chief, last week prompted to do all he could to get action for a reorganization, had resigned.

Elwood A. Curtis, a member of Oyster Bay Bird Sanctuary since announced Sunday that Oaring had pledged his aid to the needed funds as soon as possible. On Tuesday Mr. Darling's resignation was announced by the United States Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Curtis' resignation following a month of friction. When Darling decided government aid was snatching his program, he was sharply against cabinet members. He was told money for his program had passed with no appropriation bill. Congress if he didn't get money he would resign.

Darling will return to his contracting business. His successor, whom Oyster Bay's bird sanctuary will select, is Ira O'Brien, former Mr. Darling's consulting specialist and assistant chief of the division of wildlife. Mr. O'Brien, a Nassau County, has been connected with the Bureau since 1915.

Today's breach occurred when the United States government failed to come to terms with the last summer after the Long Island State Park Commission. It had held the lease for four years. Mr. O'Brien, a Nassau County, has been connected with the Bureau since 1915.

Every walk of life was represented in the throng of persons that filled the church lawn and lined the sidewalks of Great Avenue and Church Place for blocks in each direction.

Women, young and old, many prominent in the social world, others equally endowed with worldly goods, politicians, party lines forgotten; business men, rich and poor; contented individuals with no claim to prominence, all were united for the time to say good-bye to Anne Mullan, their friend.

All Eyes Merged
All eyes were made as the honorary pallbearers moved from the church led by James L. Dowsey, Nassau County Republican leader, Anne's political mentor and employer. He was shaken visibly. His face worked with emotion as the pallbearers carried the coffin of the young girl whose passing had thrust three townships into deep mourning.

NOTES

By J. C. COOLEY

For ladies to ride on." I should love to have seen the ladies of past centuries ride the high stepping hackneys of today, the ones made familiar by those bred at Sheldubne by the late Dr. Seward Webb, and ones so well known today. There wasn't very much "ambling" about these animals.

But the use of the word has been common, or to use the obvious expression "hackneyed," and the Oxford dictionary is authority for what I say. Nor do you have to go out-of-doors to use the word "hack." He who does humdrum work is a hack, and though the qualifying adjective, a hackney, may give it a ritzy touch, a literary touch, a touch of dumb sort of person who does precisely what I am doing at present.

To go out hacking by yourself, or with a companion, delightful as I've thought it, may not be the last word in delicious excitement. But though polo is over, though today with the United Hounds meeting at Belmont Park, and a most delightful and successful meeting it was, racing has departed, the fox hounds are here.

For some time I've heard it said that fox hunting on Long Island is nearing its end, that the country is being built up so rapidly that conditions are impossible, etc., etc. And each year the enthusiasm, instead of abating, as according to the Cassandra it should, increases, the number of followers is as great as ever, and because of the genius of those in its authority, the sport is just grand.

I think that the harder a job it is to do, probably the better it will be done. The challenge of apparently insuperable difficulties, is a challenge that will heighten the brain and imagination of those who are out of the ordinary. The Meadow Brook Hunt does not happen to be blessed with a country which would make it comparable to the great fields of the midlands of England, from time immemorial the paradise of the fox hunter, the shires of Leicester and Northampton, of Warwick and Rutland, but it does have to have had at its head as M. P. H. one of the most capable sportsmen and fox hunters in the United States, and in its huntsman, an individual who has the three great attributes, craft, in his profession of viceroy, an ardent love and enthusiasm for his job, and the courageous heart.

Mr. Harry T. Peters for some years has been Master of Meadow Brook. He is about the most extraordinarily versatile sportsman of my acquaintance. As a sportsman, not only is he a master as to his title, but he is a master in his knowledge of the innumerable duties that fall to the lot of the Master of Hounds in a country much too cramped for an idealistic point of view for all the people who want to go hunting. Enthusiasm is a grand thing and enthusiasm will move mountains. Also it will break down post and rail fences, it will ride better skelter over bounds and it will commit a dozen atrocities, all of which have to be dealt with tactfully but firmly.

The mere fact that fox hunting goes on at all on Long Island country within some 20 miles of New York City, is proof enough of Mr. Peters' genius and good common sense.

Longer than Mr. Peters' reign as M. P. H., succeeding Mr. Harry I. Nicholas, who did a supreme good job in the office of Allison, the huntsman, a "Virginia" who came here, as I remember it, around 1912, and who proved to us that Virginia might be the home of Pres. Wilson, but also and I'm sure with that I don't regard this title just as highly, that is the home of Mrs. Wilson, that is to hunt the fox. For some 22 or 23 years, Allison has shown grand sport under the most difficult conditions. Though I hope and pray that he as far away from an epitaph, can and will write a better than I have said about you that for over a score of years you brought happiness and clean joy to your neighbors, and that the only things scared of you were the foxes.

And for the past several years, associated with Mr. Peters, has been Mr. Harry D. Gibson, I suppose that before he donned the scarlet of the fox hunter, that Mr. Gibson was better known in the "muff" of the business man. That "muff" is rather awkward, but I don't know of any work to take its place unless I paraphrase it in a roundabout way, saying the spring suiting as a herringbone combination. I have to put it that way for I have no idea what herringbone is. However, Mr. Gibson was the cat's whisker as a banker, but knowing no more about banking than I do about herringbone, I have to stop.

Then like any sensible banker, he decided to take up fox hunting and the genius which permitted him to prove that though two and two made four, though there were exceptions because it was a poor rule that permitted him at least one exception, permitted him and enabled him to study viceroy with the same devotion as he had studied banking. His earlier mercantile training was no handicap, and it all comes under the same heading, which way will win the hunted fox turn.

It's amazing how men of Mr. Gibson's type will adjust themselves to the vicissitudes of the hunting field. It is so entirely a question of theory, it is so entirely certain that no one can know very much about scent and hunting conditions, that the introduction into the field of a man like Mr. Gibson with his fine intellect and unbiased point of view, is tremendously interesting.

If you are going to regard a certain question concerning which there are no facts, and only theories, the opinion of the clear-thinking man is of incalculable value. And it's amazing how quickly men of Mr. Gibson's type adjust themselves to the situation. Fox hunting is the most complicated sport in the world, and I'm not sure that we are any wiser than we were a century ago, no matter how much faster and more uniform to the Peterborough type are the hounds, no matter how vastly better bred the horse.

But, straight or crooked, with bone or not, with catlike feet, of feet like the fox they hunt, the found in common with all dogs has something of which we humans know nothing. They have the sense of smell to the nth degree, and we have it only so negatively that we can only perhaps appreciate the charm of Chane's latest creation over an orange apple.

But if you waded Chane's latest creation in New York, 23 miles away from where I sit and write, do you suppose I could start running and giving tongue follow the line to New York? Oh, you needn't be so quick to say "No."

WEATHER FORECAST
We guess the sure enough winter days are on their way and it's farewell to the beautiful days of Indian Summer. We're in for some chilly and unsettled weather, to say nothing of the possibility of it being most disagreeable if it is anything like what we've been having. Naturally when you start to go to a football game, and we've said that the elements are likely to be unsettled, you don't know whether to take an umbrella or three blankets. You might as well not take the rain protector, because your fellow watchers in back of you will protest too much at your using such a thing.

Rules For The Serving Of Beer

There are few rules and regulations for the service of beer. It goes without saying that it must be well chilled. Perhaps here is a chance for a mild warning about stocking the refrigerator. Distribute the bottles on various shelves so that the currents of air will not be cut off, and then the beer itself, and the other foods, will be cooled evenly. It is hardly necessary to say that ice must never be put into beer. It just isn't done.
